What should I be doing now—6 months before sailing?

Charlotte Said:

Top of the list...having your passport or applied for it, either the card or book. For those that haven't, you can go online and print an application (DS-11) or go to your local post office for the form and all the information you will need.

I'm sure you have all thought about who will be going: spouse (significant other), employees, children, and, you might even have an incentive program at work so you don't really know yet....either way, try to come up with the number of cabins you think you will need and do the buy-in ...$50.00 per person....you will get this back or credit towards your room if needed....secure your spot at the lowest cost possible.

OK, next on my list is going to the Carnival web site and checking out all the excursions so you can plan your day trip off the boat....as well as reviewing the deck plans with illustrations of the many fun things to do and the wide variety of activities, endless food, and places to go while on board the ship. The pictures are so awesome and you'll wish you were there... right now....on the deck, enjoying the sun, not a care in the world, with a good book in one hand and a Margarita in the other. Sorry, I got lost in the moment!!! I'm back now!! Time is ticking...don't let the date slip up on you!! It's going to be a BLAS.....Don't Miss It!!!!

The first thing I can suggest is to decide whose going. Which family members, which employees and who can they bring. Then go to the website and complete the Early Buy-In. Looking at the cabin block those berths are going quick. This Buy-In will secure your cabins and the $100 per cabin will be refunded to you should you have enough points when the contest is over.

Once you have decided whose going make sure they know to take care of their passport. The strangest things can hold up that process. For me it was the need of a certified birth certificate. It took me three months to get one from Georgia and you have to have it to get your passport. So, take it from me—start this process now.

Next, take a look at the cruise website at sentrynet.com and go to the links on the Carnival website that talk about the ship and all that is available. It's OK to be excited this far in advance and to begin to think about the things you want to do. Look at the excursions and see if there is anything that stands out as a must do in your mind. Or, decide now if you would prefer a go it on your own type visit to the island. It's time to sit back and look at your options so when time grows near you're ready to make decisions.
